CIVIL AVIATION AUTHORITY OF SINGAPORE

Role of Shippers and Freight Forwarders In Preventing the Transport of Undeclared Dangerous Goods by Air

Articles and substances classified as dangerous goods are inherently hazardous. They may be flammable, toxic, corrosive or even radioactive. Regulations governing the transport of dangerous goods by air focus on mitigating their inherent hazard characteristics through packaging, hazard communication, segregation etc. When undeclared dangerous goods that do not comply with safety regulations are hidden in general cargo consignments and transported on an aircraft, they present a safety risk to aircraft and its occupants and may result in aircraft incidents and accidents.

Fire in ULD suspected to be caused by undeclared dangerous goods

In Mar 2023, a unit load device (ULD) containing e-commerce goods, including lithium batteries contained in equipment, emitted smoke and caught fire about an hour after it was unloaded from a passenger aircraft in Jakarta. Ground staff subsequently utilised 12 bottles of fire extinguishers to put out the fire. Originating from Hong Kong as a shipper loaded ULD, four packages in the ULD suffered significant burnt damage.

Preliminary information revealed that one of the packages damaged by fire was suspected to have contain undeclared standalone lithium batteries forbidden to be transported on a passenger aircraft. Heavy wooden crates which were loaded on top of the affected consignment could have caused damage to the package and its contents prior to the fire.

Preventing undeclared dangerous goods in general cargo consignments

When undeclared dangerous goods are transported by air, the aircraft and occupants will be exposed to unacceptable safety risks. To prevent the introduction of undeclared dangerous goods into the air transport system, shippers and freight forwarders should establish procedures to identify and prevent undeclared dangerous goods from being offered for transport in general cargo consignments. Staff of shippers and freight forwarders should also be provided with guidance and information to enable them to identify hidden dangerous goods intended to be offered for transport by air.

Measures that shippers and freight forwarders should implement include:

- Review descriptions of goods on shipper's invoices, packing lists or relevant documents;
- Look out for common hidden dangerous goods such as aerosol cans, cosmetic or perfumery products containing alcohol, gas cylinders and lithium batteries;
- Inspect all packages received from suppliers or shippers to identify dangerous goods marks and labels;
- Request for more information from suppliers or shippers if articles or substances are suspected to contain dangerous goods;
- Verify Safety Data Sheets of chemical substances to ensure that they are not classified as dangerous goods; and
- Freight forwarders should provide information to shippers to aid them in identifying hidden dangerous goods;

Shippers and freight forwarders should remain vigilant to ensure that undeclared dangerous goods are not inadvertently offered for transport by air in general cargo consignments.
